Layang-Layang is a man made Island constructed for the purposed use of the Malaysian Navy which was later developed into a dive resort. It is also known as "Swallows Reef" an atoll situated in the South China Sea, 300km north-west of Kota Kinabalu. This little land mass supports a luxurious 90-room dive resort, a Malaysian Navy Base and is a nesting colony for sea-faring migratory birds.

The island location offers absolute retreat and the only mode of transport is by boat or an hour's flight from Kota Kinabalu Airport. Its pristine reefs, excellent visibility, steep walls down to 2000m and regular sightings of pelagics have given Layang-layang the much deserved reputation of being one of the top ten dive locations in the world. The reef topography is essentially made up of rich growth of hard corals; some so shallow that they break the sea surface during low tides, but most begin at depths of about 5 meters right down to the ocean floor. A large part is still unexplored. The reefs here harbour many new life forms and species yet to be identified.

Boasting 14 fantastic and beautiful diving sites, what can be said to be any diver's dreams of seeing all sorts of marine life forms in one island. The names for all 14 dive sites are as follows: Navigator Lane, Gorgonian Forest, The Point, Dogtooth Lair, Wreck Point, New Channel, Tunnel, Runway, Old Channel, Snapper Ledge, D Wall, Valley, Wrasse Strip and the Crack Reef.

It is home to schools of barracuda and big-eye trevally, bump-head parrotfish, lionfish, moray eels, nudibranches, gobies, the ghost pipe fish, and frequently seen green and hawkbill turtles. The corals are plentiful and healthy teeming with sea fans more than three meters across, filtering plankton from passing currents. The 20 meters deep lagoon has some fantastic macro creatures such as seahorses, cuttlefish and pipefish but it is the pelagic visiting the outer walls that will truly excite divers. School of scalloped hammerhead sharks, grey reef sharks, leopard sharks and the occasional threshers and silvertip sharks can also be seen.

Stingrays including manta rays, pygmy devil rays, marbled rays and eagle rays. Rarer sightings such as Whale sharks, Orcas and Melon Headed Whales have all been reported over the last few years. Spinner and bottle nose dolphins frequently tail the dive boats to each location and may have the opportunity to snorkel and dive with these intelligent and amazing creatures!

For these reasons Layang-Layang is named one of the best diving island in the world.
